

Mario BRUNELLO

In 1986 he was the first Italian ever to win the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, which launched him into a stunning international career. Brunello has played with some of the most prestigious orchestras, including the London Philharmonic, Royal Philharmonic, Munich Philharmonic, Philadelphia Orchestra, Mahler Chamber Orchestra, Orchestre National de France, NHK Symphony Tokyo, Filarmonica della Scala, Accademia di Santa Cecilia, DSO Berlin. He has also collaborated with conductors such as Valery Gergiev, Riccardo Muti, Yuri Temirkanov, Riccardo Chailly, Vladimir Jurowski, Ton Koopman, Seiji Ozawa, Daniele Gatti, Myung-Whun Chung and Claudio Abbado. Abbado has, over the years, invited Brunello several times to play with him and the Orchestra of the Lucerne Festival and the Mozart Orchestra. With both orchestras Brunello has appeared as a soloist and also as a conductor.

Mario Brunello often takes on the dual roles of conductor and soloist, and in 1994 he founded the Orchestra d'Archi Italiana with which he tours intensively both in Italy and abroad.

Chamber music plays an important role in Brunello's artistic life and he collaborates with artists including Gidon Kremer, Martha Argerich, Frank Peter Zimmermann, Yuri Bashmet, Maurizio Pollini, Valery Afanassiev, Andrea Lucchesini, the Borodin and the Alban Berg Quartets.

In his artistic life Brunello reserves ample time for projects involving diverse art forms (literature, philosophy, science, theatre). Through new ways of communication he tries to attract new audiences, creating interactive performances of music, images and words. A large number of these activities take place in Antiruggine, a remodelled workshop that is ideal for these experiments.

The diverse artistic genres that Brunello experiments are reflected in a wide ranging collection of recordings which include the Bach Suites and Sonatas by Brahms, Beethoven and Chopin, as well as many other recordings dedicated to contemporary works for solo cello. In 2008 Deutsche Grammophon published a CD with the Beethoven Triple Concerto conducted by Claudio Abbado.

EGEA Records Company has produced a record series articulated into five releases dedicated to Mario Brunello: "Odusia", a musical Odyssey through Mediterranean culture, "Brunello and Vivaldi", dedicated to the cello Concertos by Vivaldi, "Violoncello and" for solo cello, "Schubert e Lekeu" with the pianist Andrea Lucchesini and a double CD with the Bach Suites. This last one has been awarded with the prestigious Italian Critic Award 2010.

The major engagements of the season 2011/12 include the Dvorak Concerto with the Accademia di Santa Cecilia conducted by Antonio Pappano, concerts with the Kremerata Baltica, Filarmonica Toscanini, RAI Symphony Orchestra in Turin, Orchestre du Capitole de Toulouse and a long tour in Japan in Summer 2012.

Mario Brunello plays a precious Maggini cello from the 1600s.
